Lieutenant Frank Webb, 1st Platoon Leader of "A" Company, was killed In Action on May 5, 1968, near the villages of An Bao in Binh Dinh Province.

"A" Company forces were attacked and nearly overrun by the "Black Star" Regiment of the North Vietnamese Army. 50th Infantry Archive Documentation shows that the "A" Company Commander, Lt Hinton, was killed near the outset of the attack...shortly after calling for the remaining Armored Personnel Carriers (APCs) to immediately withdraw back the way they had entered the area.

Most of Lieutenant Webb's Platoon's APCs had been disabled in the initial volley of enemy rocket fire and he attempted to rally his now "foot soldier" troops into a defensive position as human waves of NVA soldiers maneuvered in for the kill from three sides.

Caught in open rice paddy areas, with only a small paddy wall for protection, the men of the 1st platoon were being killed by withering enemy fire. Frank Webb was killed by gun shot wound to his head...he died instantly.

Charlie Company was called in to reinforce the besieged Alpha Co. Credit "C" Company's CPT Jay Copley with saving the remaining 1st Platoon troops of Alpha Company as he pushed his relief element swiftly into the battle. Upon arrival, the enemy, who had fallen silent to allow the "C" Company troops to enter the ambush zone, opened fire with an intense and sustained barrage of small arms, automatic weapons and B40 Rocket fire...again from three sides. As Copley organized the Charlie Company APC's machine guns into a forceful counter attack, the enemy began to withdraw. A second reinforcement element, "B" Company 1st Battalion, 69th Armor, came on the scene under the command of CPT Tim Grogan. At this time, "C" Company's CPT Copley was severely wounded, but refused evacuation until he was certain his troops would be able to effect a safe withdrawal. Fierce fighting ensued on both 1/50th Companies and "B" Company, 1/69th Armor as "B" Company, 1/50th Infantry, was also called in to battle the huge enemy force. Although the enemy made one last probe and mortar attack on the American forces at their night Lager, the Regiment was never able to mount another sustained attack. Captured enemy soldiers claimed air strikes had decimated a planned morning attack...and that the Regiment was rendered "Ineffective" by the two day battle. US forces suffered a total of 22 killed in the battle, 11 from "A" Company, 1 from "HQ" Company 2 each from "B" and "C" Companies of the 1/50th, 2 from the 69th Armor and 4 from the 17th Aviation Helicopter which was shot down on the first day. close to 100 were wounded. The enemy may have suffered over 300 killed, but the record reflects that 120 bodies were counted.
