At the present time, we have no definitive information on the date of the wound event (Booby Trap Detonated) that took Bobby Lee Gentry's life. We are hopeful that some documentation or eyewitness will be forthcoming. It is suspected that Gentry was wounded at some earlier date...and days later, died of his wound. There is no mention of any casualty from "A" Company on the Daily Staff Journal for either the 50th Infantry nor for the 173rd Airborne Brigade on July 8th, 1969. Intelligent speculation is that Gentry and several others were wounded by the blast that took the lives of Lorenzo Pettis and William Matlock on June 12th. This was the last documented occasion where men were wounded in "A" Company prior to Gentry's death.

The Battalion History for the June 12th Incident stated: "At 1130 hours, an Armored Personnel Carrier (APC) from "A" Company hit a mine, suspected to have been a pressure detonated 175mm Artillery shell at BR958799. One U.S. Soldier was KIA and 5 wounded (One of which later died of his wounds).

Gentry's Casualty Report, DA Form 2496, states: "Individual died as the result of peritonitis and general sepsis secondary to wounds previously received, while on a combat operation when a booby trap detonated. He was admitted to a military medical facility, placed on the Seriously Injured list and then on the Very Seriously Injured list, and later expired."

Based on this documentation, I will show location information on the event from June 12th for Bobby Lee Gentry. (See Map Below)
